Delivering Hope

OnTrac partners with the American Cancer Society for Daffodil Days.

As the first flower of spring, the daffodil symbolizes the hope we all share for a future without cancer. Started over 35 years ago, Daffodil Days has grown to become one of the American Cancer Society's most popular and cherished programs and has helped give strength and hope to the millions of Americans facing cancer.

Nina Hegyi, an OnTrac employee who lost her mother to Leukemia, has been helping deliver daffodils for 10 years. "It helps move the peg forward towards a cure," she says. She and 40 other OnTrac volunteers invest their time and energy to help raise funds for cancer research and education in the anticipation that someday it will no longer be a threat to our loved ones.

"I feel like I'm making a difference and I hope someday people won't have to go through what I did," Nina adds.

This March will mark the 11th year OnTrac and its employees are participating in Daffodil Days.
